"Making a Marvelous Man"

Max Misto, the famous Muscle Builder of America, beamed with satisfaction as he watched the men going through their exercises in his well equipped gymnasium. He pointed to a man on a bench and then spoke to his new assistant, Joe Volpert.

"The purpose of the incline bench dumbbell presses is to pump up the entire chest group. The parallel bar dips are for the lower chest muscles. The floor dips will widen the skeletal structure. The bent arm laterals will provide internal and external form. When Pete Shepard started, his chest was only 31 inches. Now he's up to 42 inches with a straight fifty as a goal. And he'll make it with the schedule we have set up for him."

"Pardon me, Mr. Misto," interrupted the voice of his secretary, Helen Marks, "but Wilbert Scoble is waiting for you in your office. I think you better see him now. That poor boy is so upset and you can put him at ease."

"Coming in a minute, Helen," replied Max Misto. Then turning to his new assistant he added, "Watch the schedule sheets carefully. Explain the next exercises to Frank Raycroff. I'll be in my office."

Wilbert Scoble was just twenty and he was doing his best to raise a small growth of hair in the space between the top of his upper lip and the bottom of his nose. He was about five feet ten and probably didn't weigh more than 135 pounds. The standard joke in his neighborhood was: "Well, Uncle Sam is still waiting to get Wil into the Army. When they need another slab for the fence they can use him." And Wilbert Scoble was twisting his hands when the most famous muscle builder of America entered his office.

"Thanks for seeing me, Mr. Misto," greeted Wilbert as he arose from his chair. "You are going to make a new man out of me, aren't you?"

"Is that a question or a statement," smiled Max Misto. "I can always help a man provided he wants to help himself. Before I set up any schedule for you, there must be a complete physical examination."

"Already done," snapped back Wilbert Scoble. "My family doctor gave me an o.k. and I have this written report for you. So we can start at once."

"Not until you tell me about the girl and what happened to make you feel you weren't a modern he-man," demanded Max.

There was an evident look of complete surprise on the face of the young man. His eyes widened and his lower jaw fell open. He swallowed his Adam's apple twice before he could manage to say something.

"How did you know?" was what he finally muttered.

"Never mind that," grinned Max Misto. "Just go ahead and tell me the story. Don't skip any details. They are important because I want to understand your mind set."

"I met Jane Ellis when I went to high school," began Wilbert. Right in the first term. Guess you could call it puppy love. But I knew it was the real thing. We went together all through high school. I have been saving my money so we could get married someday. I have a job in my dad's plant. He is starting me at the bottom of the ladder. Says I must show I am a man. Well, it all took place last Saturday. There were six of us on a picnic and we were going to have a pleasant time. Then this big fellow comes over to our table. Seems he was once a lifeguard. Takes a look at me and then at my girl. Know what he said? That a skinny guy like me had no right to such a beautiful girl. From now on he was going to see her. He sat down and ate lunch right with us. I must have died a million deaths. It was terrible, Mr. Misto."

"And you want me to build you up so that you can go back and punch him right into the nose. And Jane will fall into your arms and look at you with a new light in her eyes," concluded Max.

"You are right," agreed Wilbert Scoble. "That's like reading my mind."

"Well, that is exactly what I will not do," countered the famous muscle builder of America.

"That is not the purpose of our exercises. To punch him in the nose would be illegal. And it would not serve any purpose. You must get revenge out of your heart and mind. The purpose of our exercises is to give you a better body and with it a better outlook on life. I feel that with physical growth there should also be spiritual growth. The ability to understand situations and meet them morally and physically. You somehow showed fear and that is why what happened took place. Now only if you understand me, can we proceed."

Wilbert Scoble didn't answer at once. He had a lot of quick thinking to do. And some readjustments in his goals of life to make. It was a full quarter of an hour before he said anything. Yet during that time, Max Misto remained quiet and relaxed. He could well sense the inner struggle taking place in the life of one Wilbert Scoble. The youth then spoke.

"You win, Mr. Misto. I think I know what you are driving at when you want me to be a better man."

Inside the gymnasium, Joe Volpert was explaining several matters to his new pupil, Wilbert Scoble.

"In my opinion, the chest is one of the most important sections of the human body. For with a well developed chest, the arms will be set off instead of the two dangling things you now have. You will also have a broader pair of shoulders. The chest exercises which you will follow are designed to strengthen your heart and lungs. This in turn will help to build the health of your vital internal organs. Mr. Misto will supply you with a diet designed to give you the energy you need to build up your body and to keep it at par."

Mrs. Stella Scoble was a puzzled wife as she sat opposite her husband in the large living room of their home. Her car was parked in the driveway because her son was going through his weight lifting exercises in the garage.

"Look here," she said to her husband George, "do you or do you not approve of what our son is doing? Grandma used to tell me that the best weight lifting exercise in the world was the old fashioned family iron. Wilbert can do that by getting a job in the laundry. And now I also must have a diet for him."

"I want a man to take over my business someday," retorted George Scoble. "Sure, I love our son, but that doesn't make me blind to his faults. That weight lifting certainly has helped him a lot.

He was explaining the first lesson to me, known as Wide Grip Bench Presses. You lie on a bench. Start with the barbell at arms length above the chest, with the hands using a collar to collar grip. Lower the bar and as soon as it touches the chest press up to arms length again and repeat. Use a steady motion. Be careful and don't bounce the bar off the chest."

"And what is the result of all this," demanded Stella Scoble. "Our son is getting so big in the chest he needs new clothing. So you better give him some more money."

"Another result," added Mr. Scoble, "is that they are beginning to respect our son down at the place. And for himself, Jimmy had trouble lifting a big box. You should see how startled he was when Wilbert did it all by himself. Maybe I should start some exercises myself."

"At your age, my beloved husband," suggested Mrs. Stella Scoble, "I think the best thing for you to do is to take off your shoes and put on your slippers."

The younger set in the neighborhood were puzzled by the definite change in appearance of Wilbert Scoble. Another picnic was planned. Jane Ellis went with an ex-lifeguard called Frank Berkson. And the day was perfect. Just after lunch a lone man by the name of Wilbert Scoble showed up. History was made that day.

It was a happy young powerfully built Wilbert Scoble who thanked Mr. Max Misto for everything.

"To say I feel like a new man is to understate it. I am a new man — thanks to you."

"Your father told me something about an incident at the picnic. Did it concern Jane Ellis and the lifeguard?" asked Mr. Misto. "He found you were a better man and you got your girl back?"

"Partly correct," replied Wilbert Scoble. "He was showing off on the beach area. Got a cramp and started to drown. So I swam out and saved him. You should see people gasp as I carried him like a feather. So now we are pals. He's coming in to take the course."

"But Jane Ellis," demanded an impatient Mr. Misto. "What about her?"

"Seems this lifeguard has a pretty sister. Her name is Bertha and she's tops. So we are going steady. Jane Ellis? Aw, that was puppy love."
